Dear Mr Burleigh

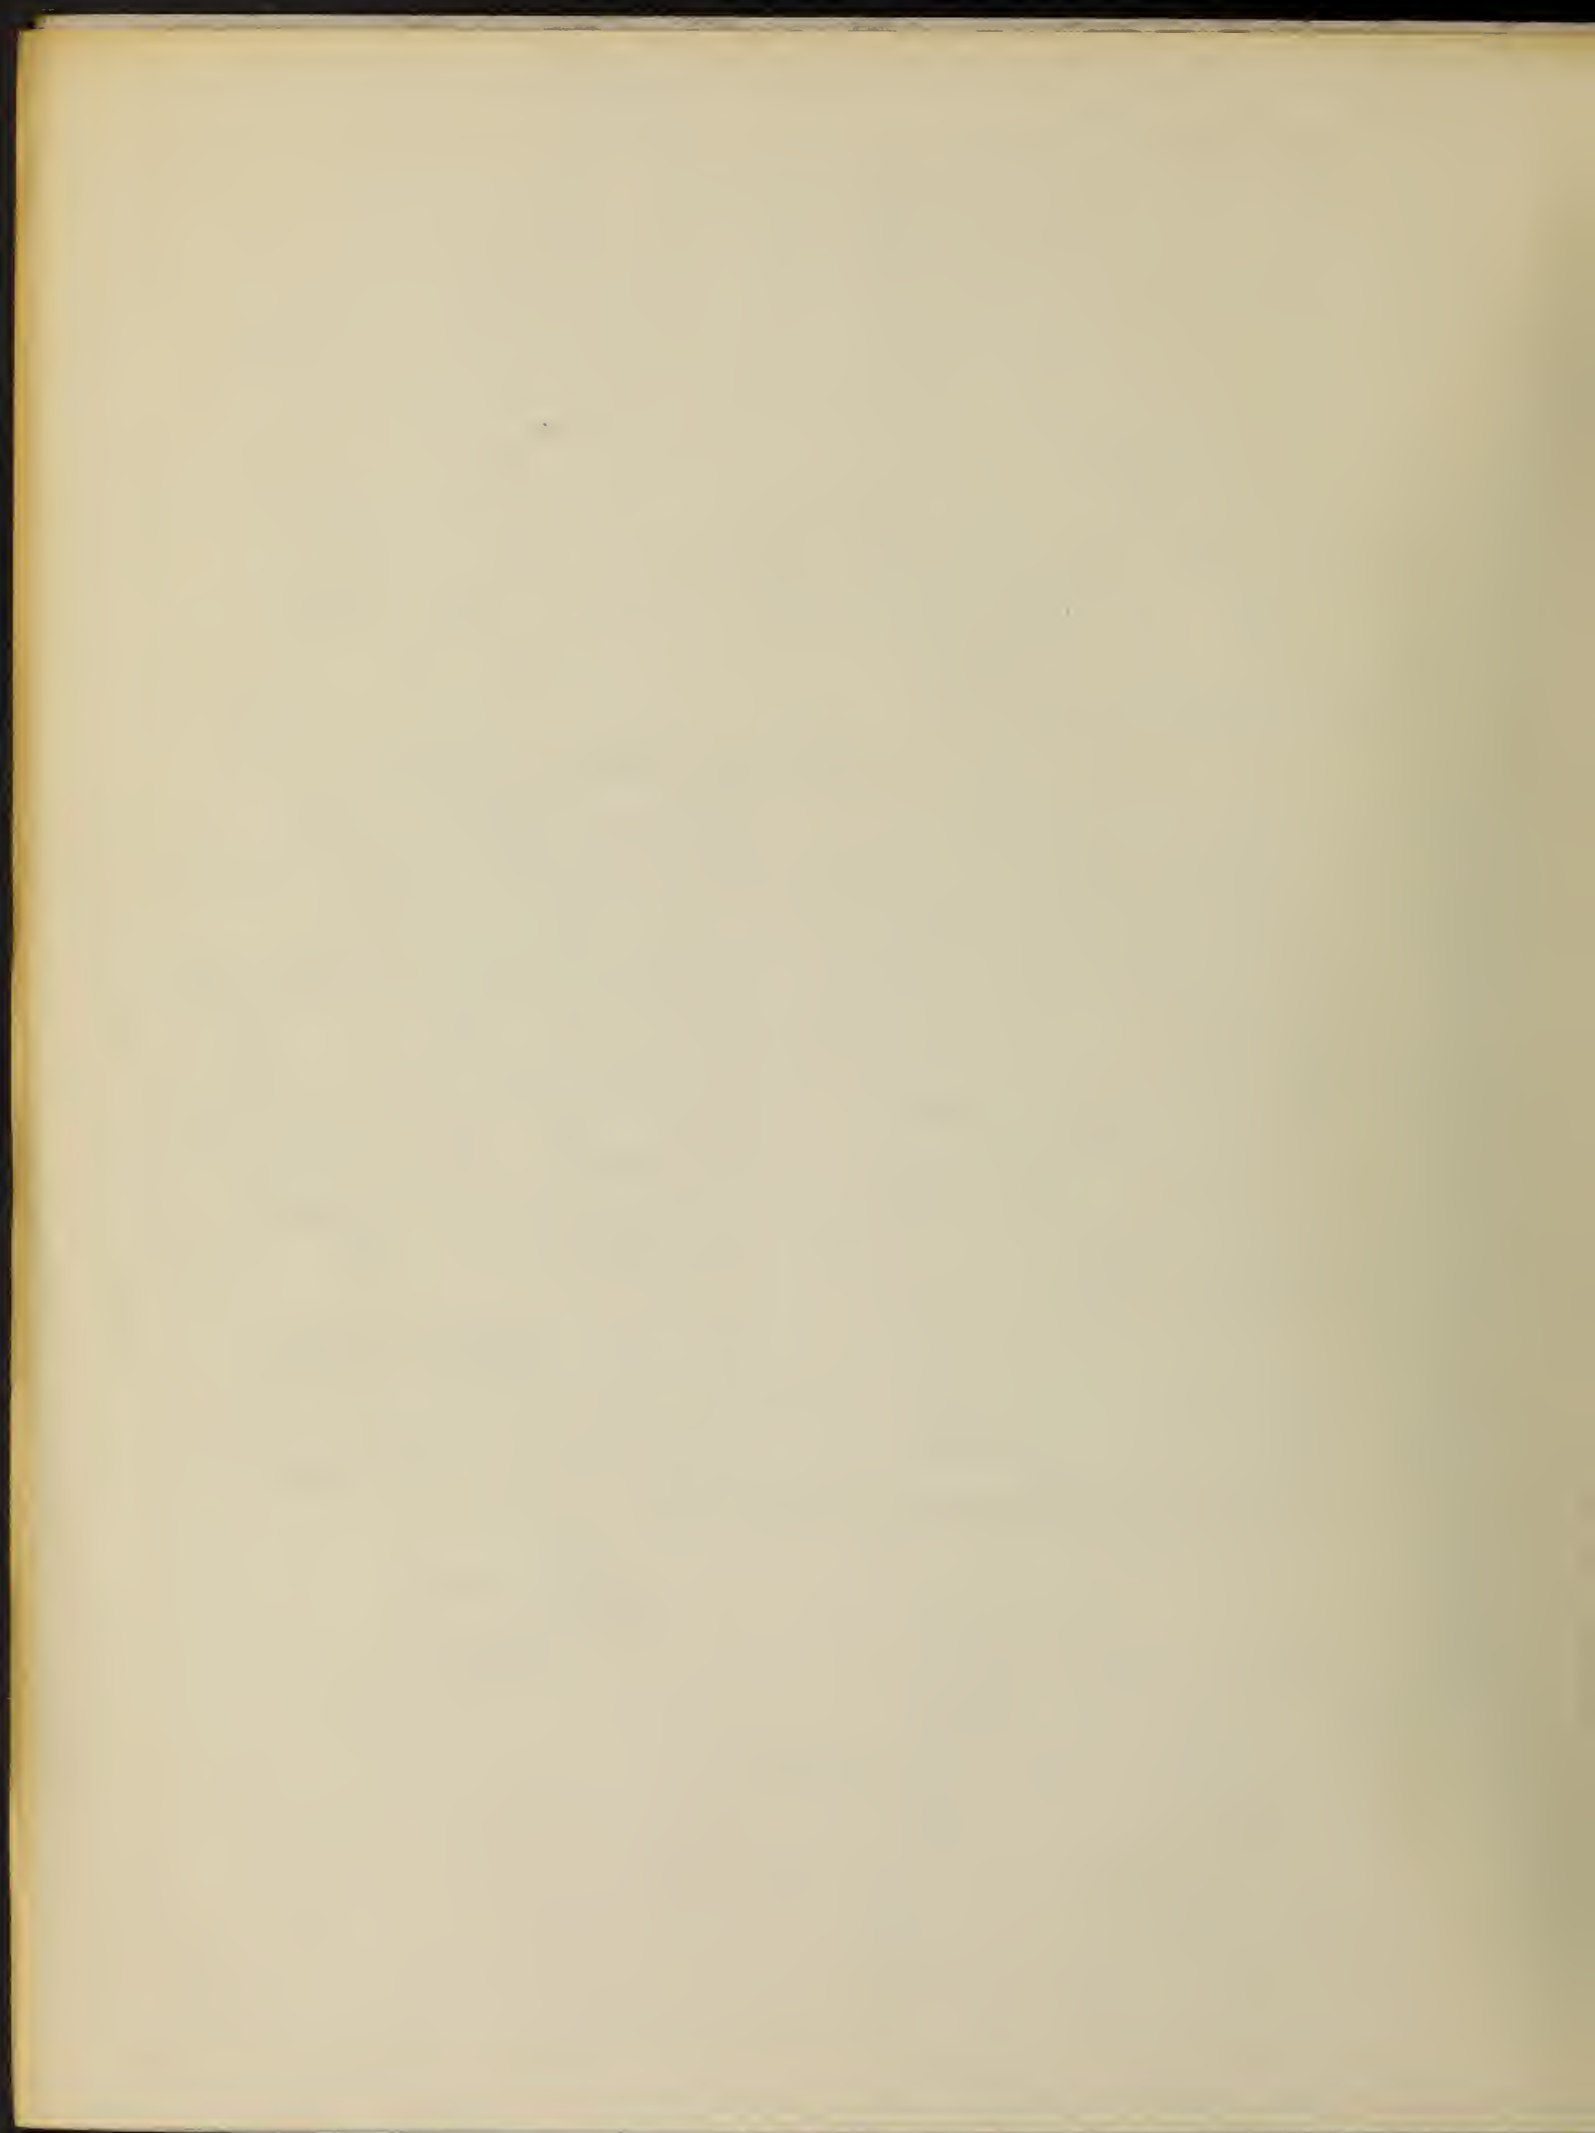

I finally got my summer Teaching Assignment completed and arrangements made for my visit to "Brown Country".

Mad and I will fly directly to Toronto August 7th, Arriving 12:20 P.M. We'll be at the Royal York Hotel in Toronto until August 10th when we'll come to Kingston, Ontario, and will put up at Town House Inn in Kingston. On August 11th and 12th, I'll get a car and driver and we'll go exploring. On August 13th, we'll return to Toronto to pick up our flight back to New York.

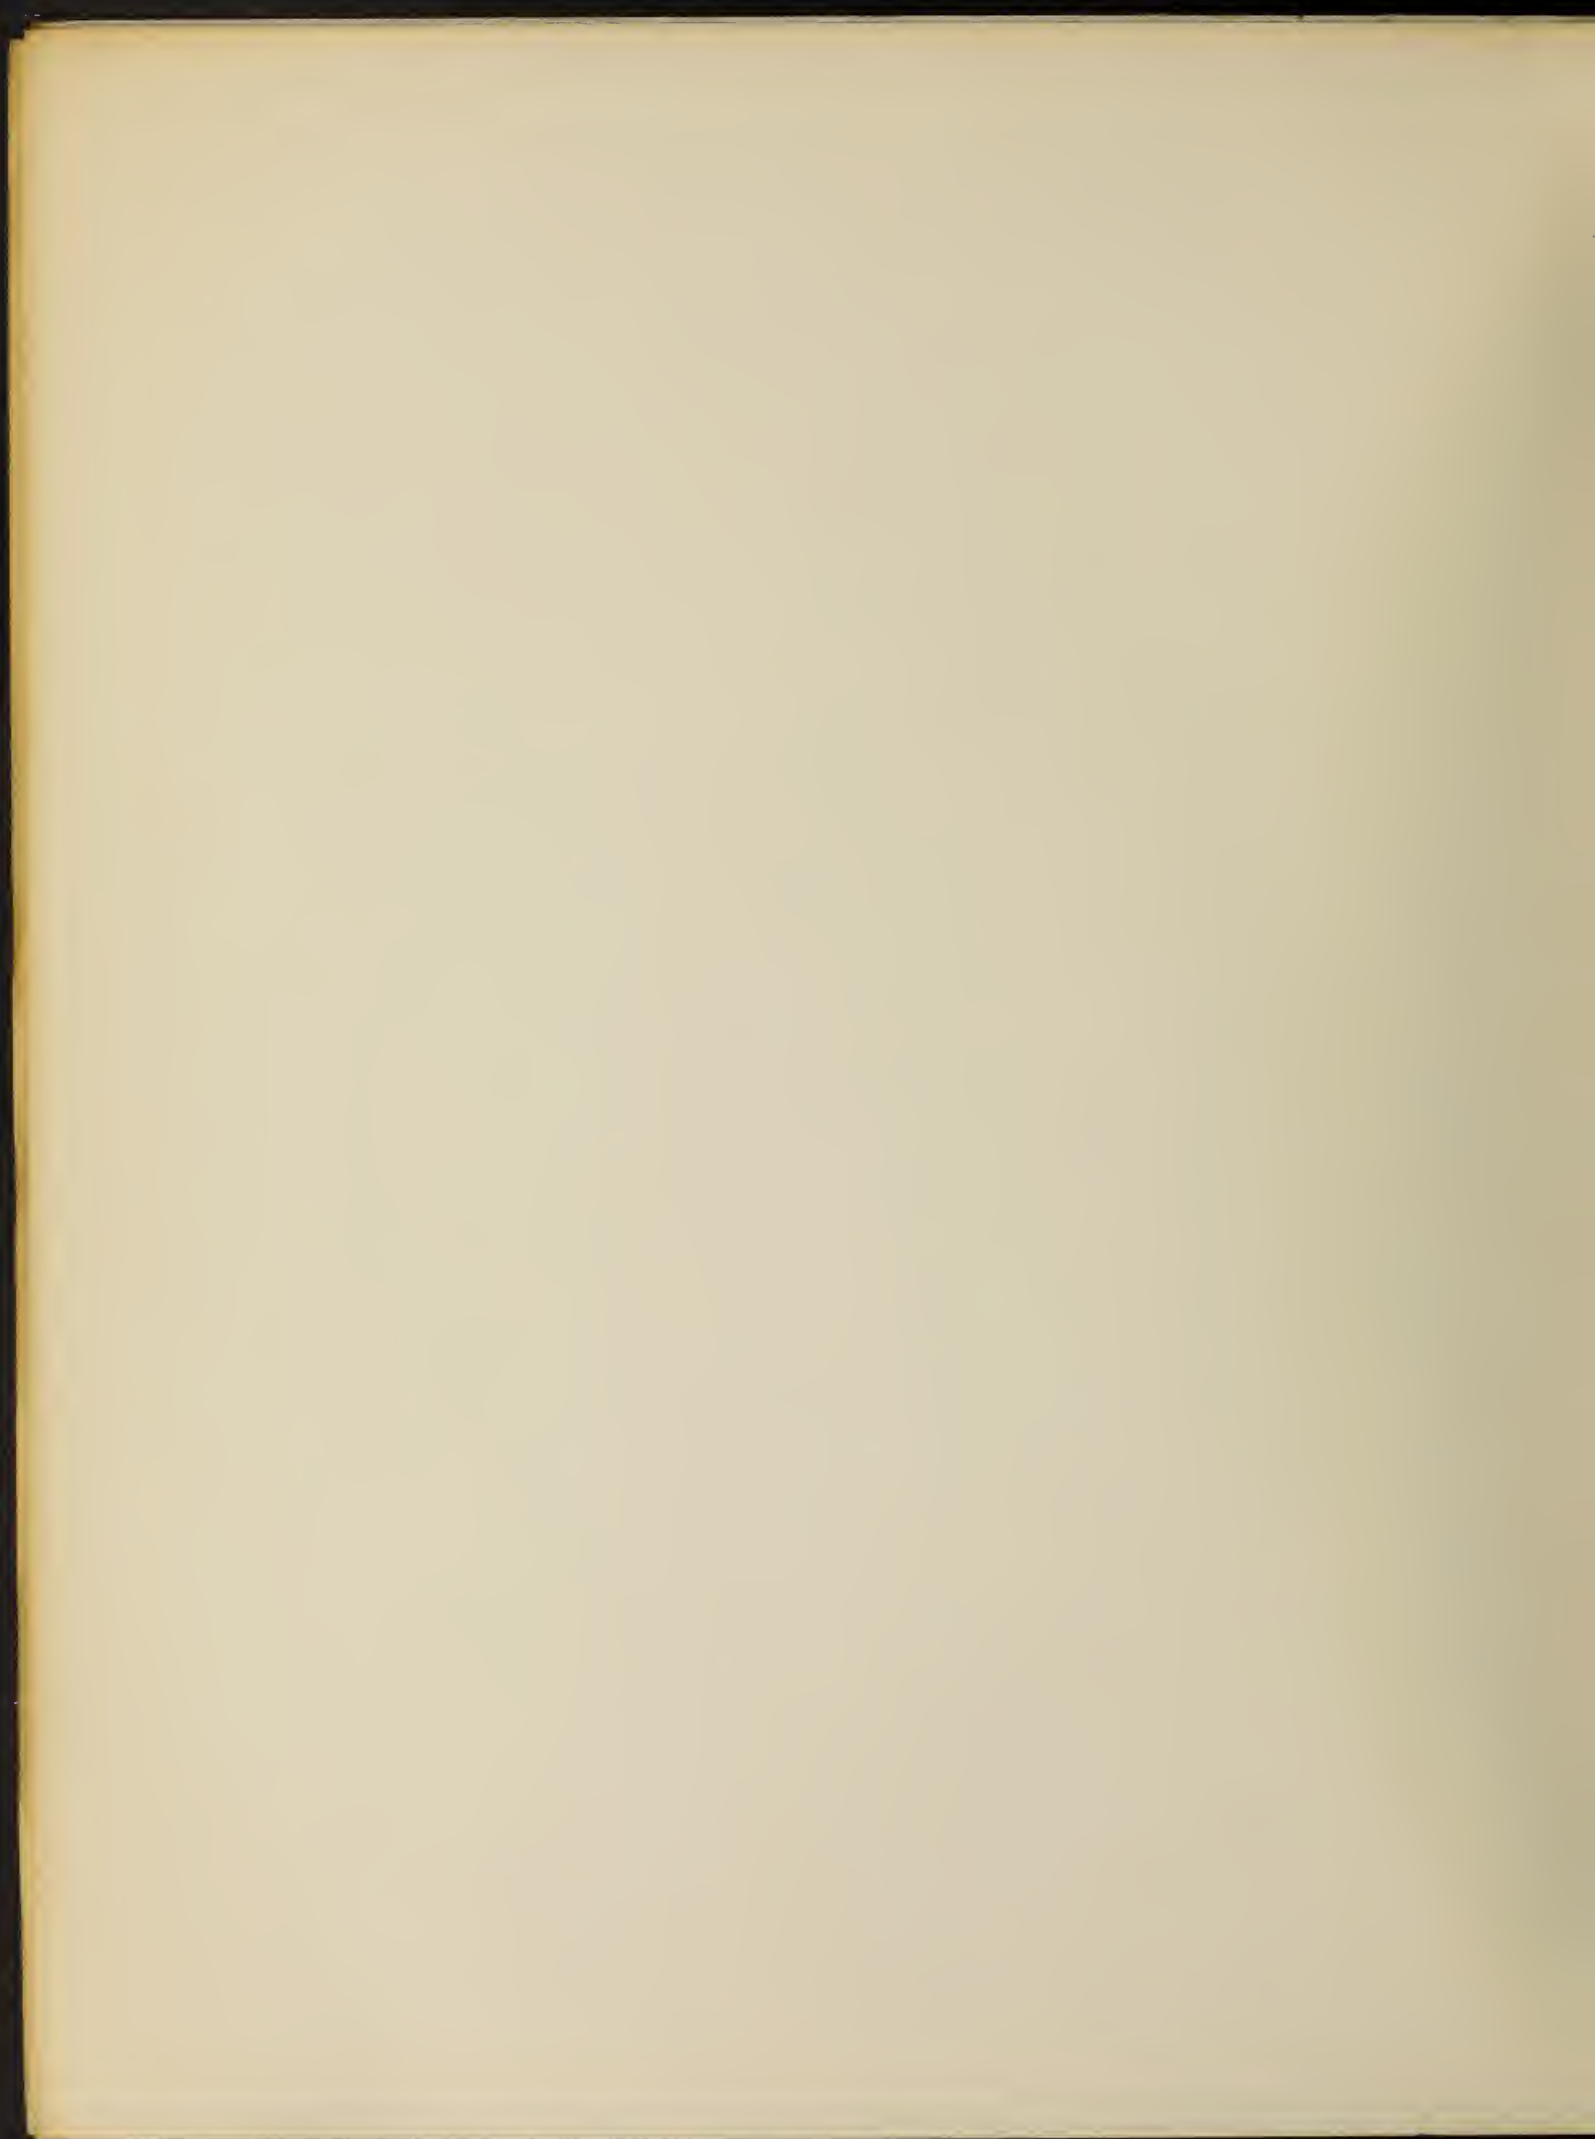

A stop at the house with the white picket fence is definitely in my plans. I want to meet the man who found our Browns.

Sincerely,
Adelia

P.S. If this conflicts with plans you've made, go right ahead and ignore our coming. Canada is close and we'll no doubt come again - AD

A Note From the Family Historian

These are the records of a family. Much effort has been expended to keep them accurate. No record is infallible. If you find errors and it is important to you to have them corrected, send them to the family historian at the address printed below. The correction will be made and you will be given credit for your service in the next supplement to this history. Further records are needed on some families. One of these may be yours. Well?

Allan Cameron Duggins

Allan Cameron Duggins was born in Oliver Springs, Anderson County, Tennessee, August 3rd, 1882, son of Andrew Buchannon and Lydia (Smith) Duggins. His Ancestors, in 1882, had already been in America for nine generations.

They did not come from Ireland into a thriving countryside. They came when great forests covered the land and they walked Indian trails mottled with sunlight by lofty and ancient trees. Theirs were hands that helped form and build a nation. They were Baptists, and farmers for the most part, or so it was with those of the Duggins Clan who left North Carolina and pushed on into the "Territory South of the Ohio River."

Allan Cameron's father was a carpenter, but his son was destined to wield an immeasurable influence on the destiny of Tennessee's schools.

This family history numbers the ancestors and descendants of Allan Cameron Duggins and his wife, Clarice Isabella Henson. It is more than a mere recording of names and dates for throughout its pages one can sense the warm, restless personality of a great man: philosopher, historian, educator, and father. So those of you who treasure this book and love these people, read on - know the man for whom history is even now being written.

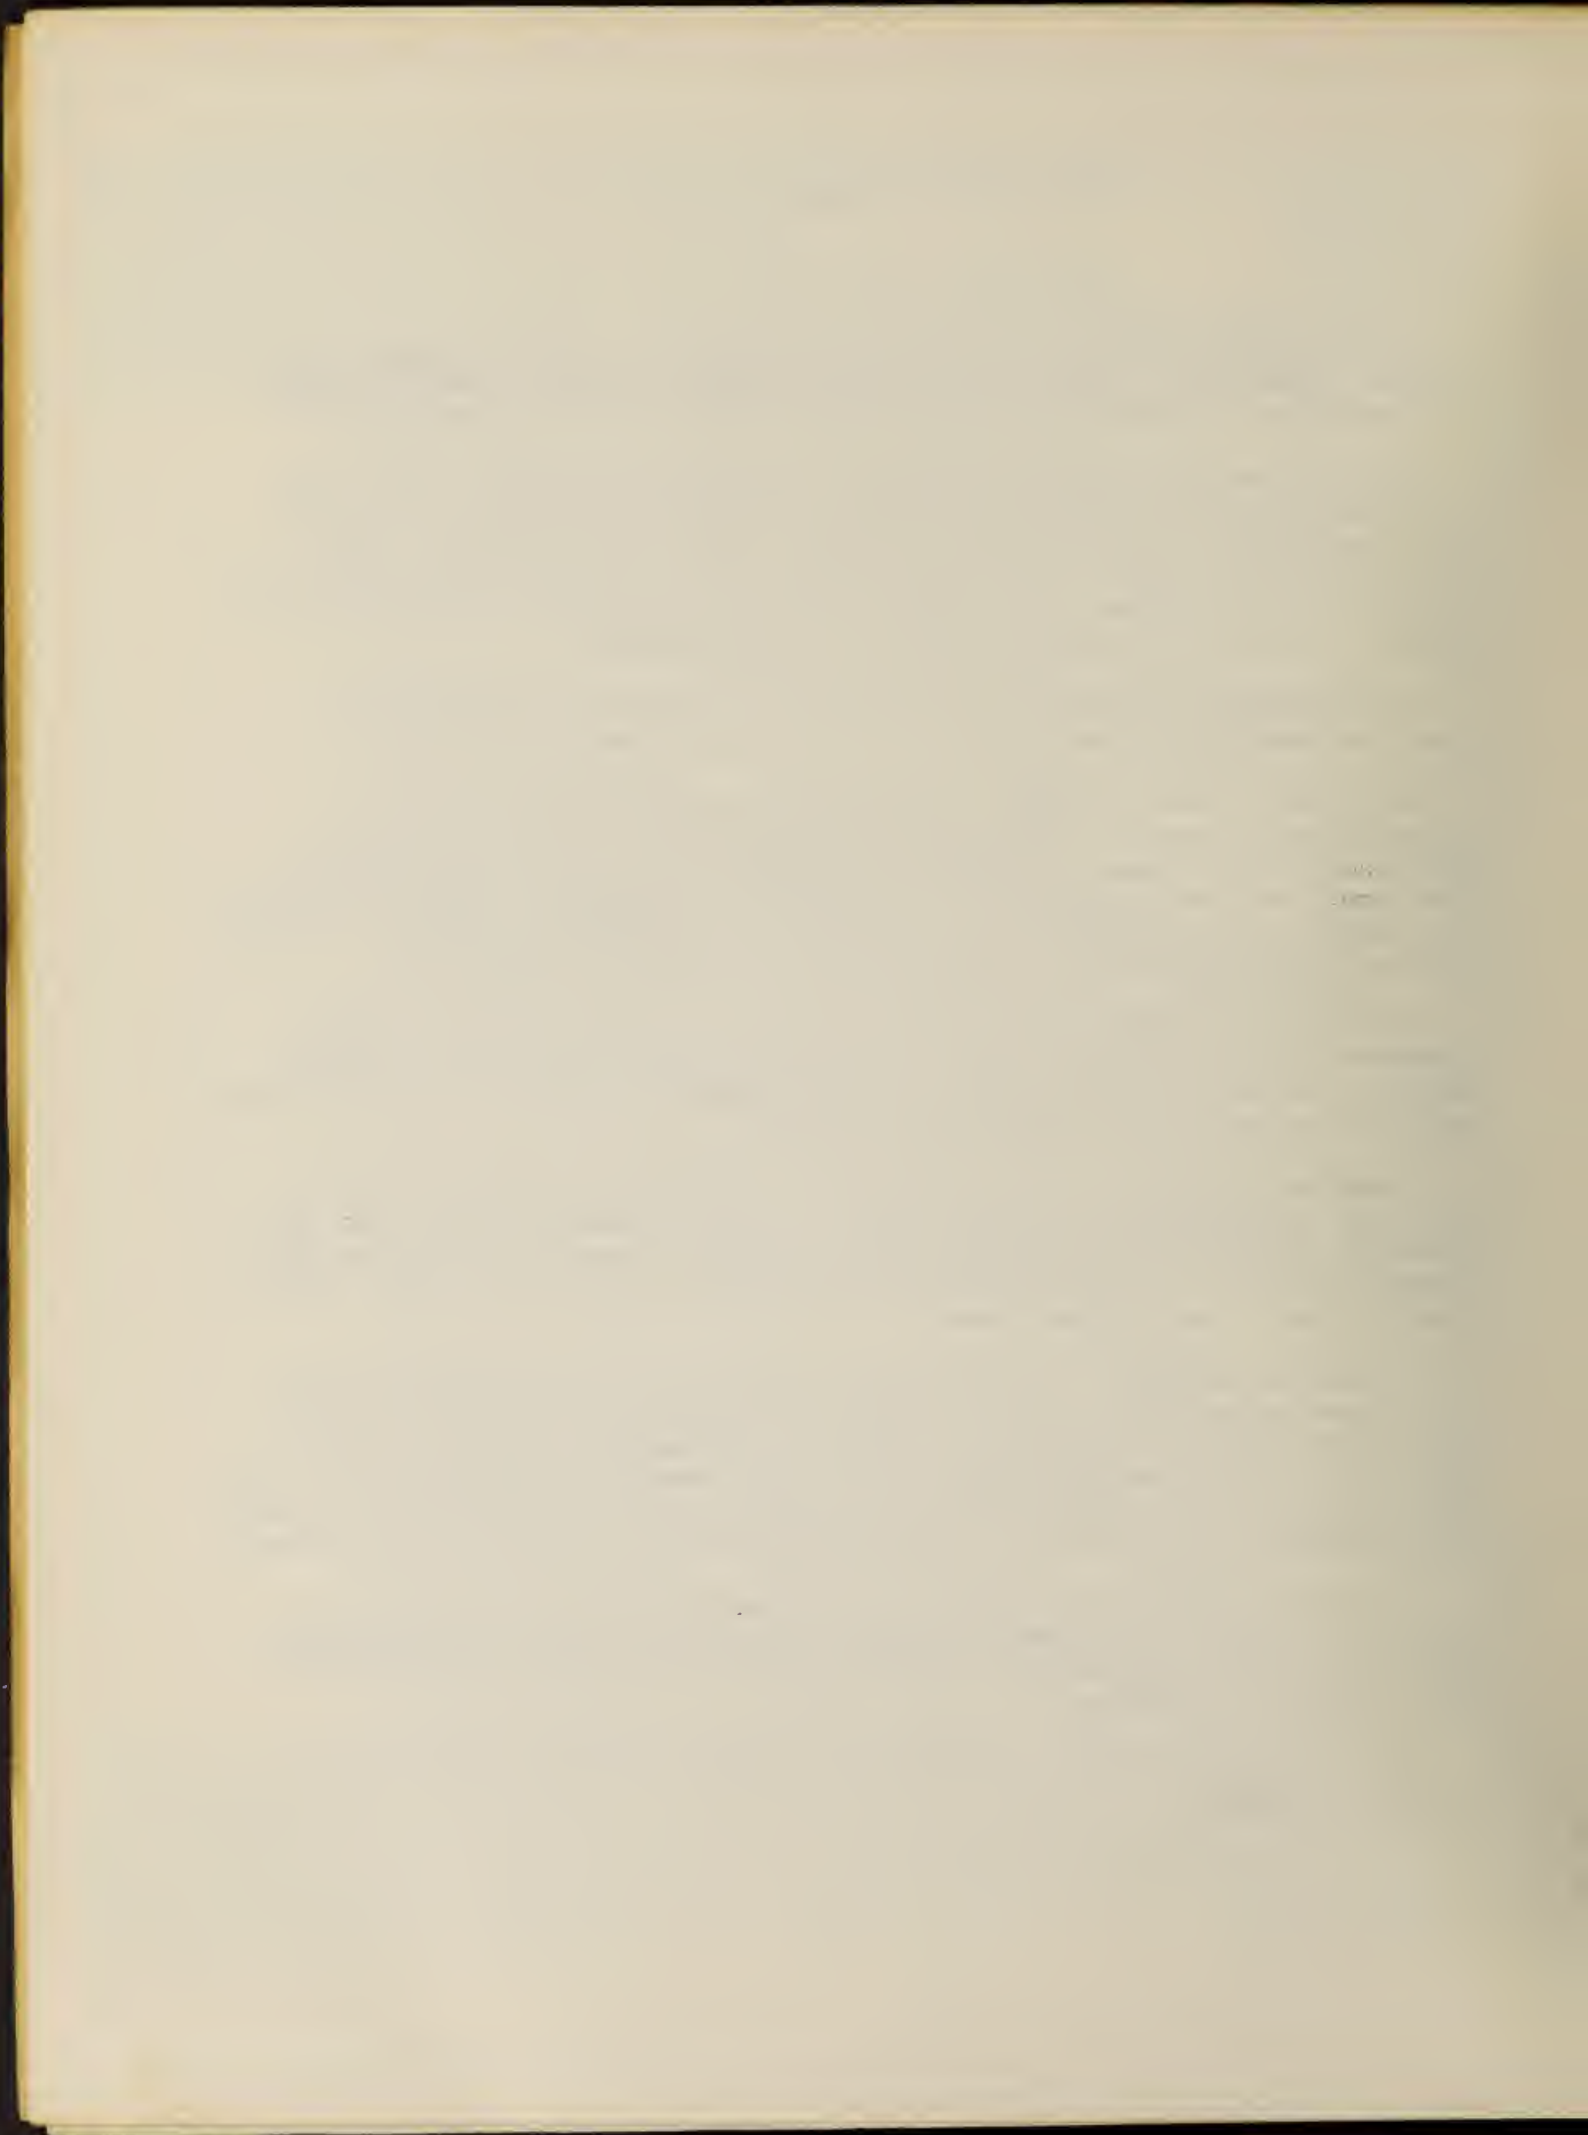

A little, red headed boy started to school in 1888, in Oliver Springs, Anderson County, Tennessee. His mother played school with him at home to prepare him for this experience. She was a wonderful teacher. Thus a future educator learned what a good school should be.

A bitter, stern first grade teacher with a bundle of switches ready at hand and teaching small children seated on backless benches with their legs dangling, taught him what a school should not be. Between these two experiences, sure and shining, a shaft of a dream arose to light the paths of yet-unborn generations of Tennesseans.

Before the twentieth century had more than begun, Allan Cameron Duggins had become an orphan, his mother and father having died within two weeks of each other. He had seen the coal miners go down into the yawning mouth of the earth while it was yet dark, and return to the living, begrimed and hopeless, after darkness had returned to the land. He had heard the sobs of wives and children when the dread cry was heard "Oh God, an explosion at the mine."

He saw the ragged, grim rising of the miners against the injustices of their lot. Many of them were descendants of others in Scotland and Ireland who had also rose against the forces that threatened their "life, liberty, and pursuit of happiness."

This too, settled deeply into the heart of Allan Cameron Duggins and he became a crusader.

He saw friends, neighbors, and relatives strike out for new lands in Illinois, Missouri, Texas, Louisiana and many more states. He saw a new nation shaping and growing for he was born only a few years after the Nation he served so well.

Allan Cameron Duggins completed five years of grade school, studying in the cool weeds along Poplar Creek. Here, another philosopher, Dr. Shelton, of Anderson County, would often stop as he rode by on his calls to add his bit of advise and encouragement. "Don't give up son," he said one day as he stopped to water his horse and pass a friendly word. "Take the easier path. Giving up is the hardest thing a man ever does."

Allan Cameron Duggins' first school was on the bench of the Cumberland Mountain. Lanky, thin, serious of face, he trudged up those mountain trails and learned from those children of Scotch-Irish pioneers further lessons in self-sufficiency, pride, stubbornness, and courage. His favorite was a wee lass named Sarah, a solemn little girl of about eight. She wore shapeless brown dresses that reached her bare feet and her face was all great, sad eyes. She was the teacher's Chief Assistant and when it was a shy little fellow's turn to recite a letter, she would bend down to the child anxiously and then announce in triumph, "He say hits uh A."

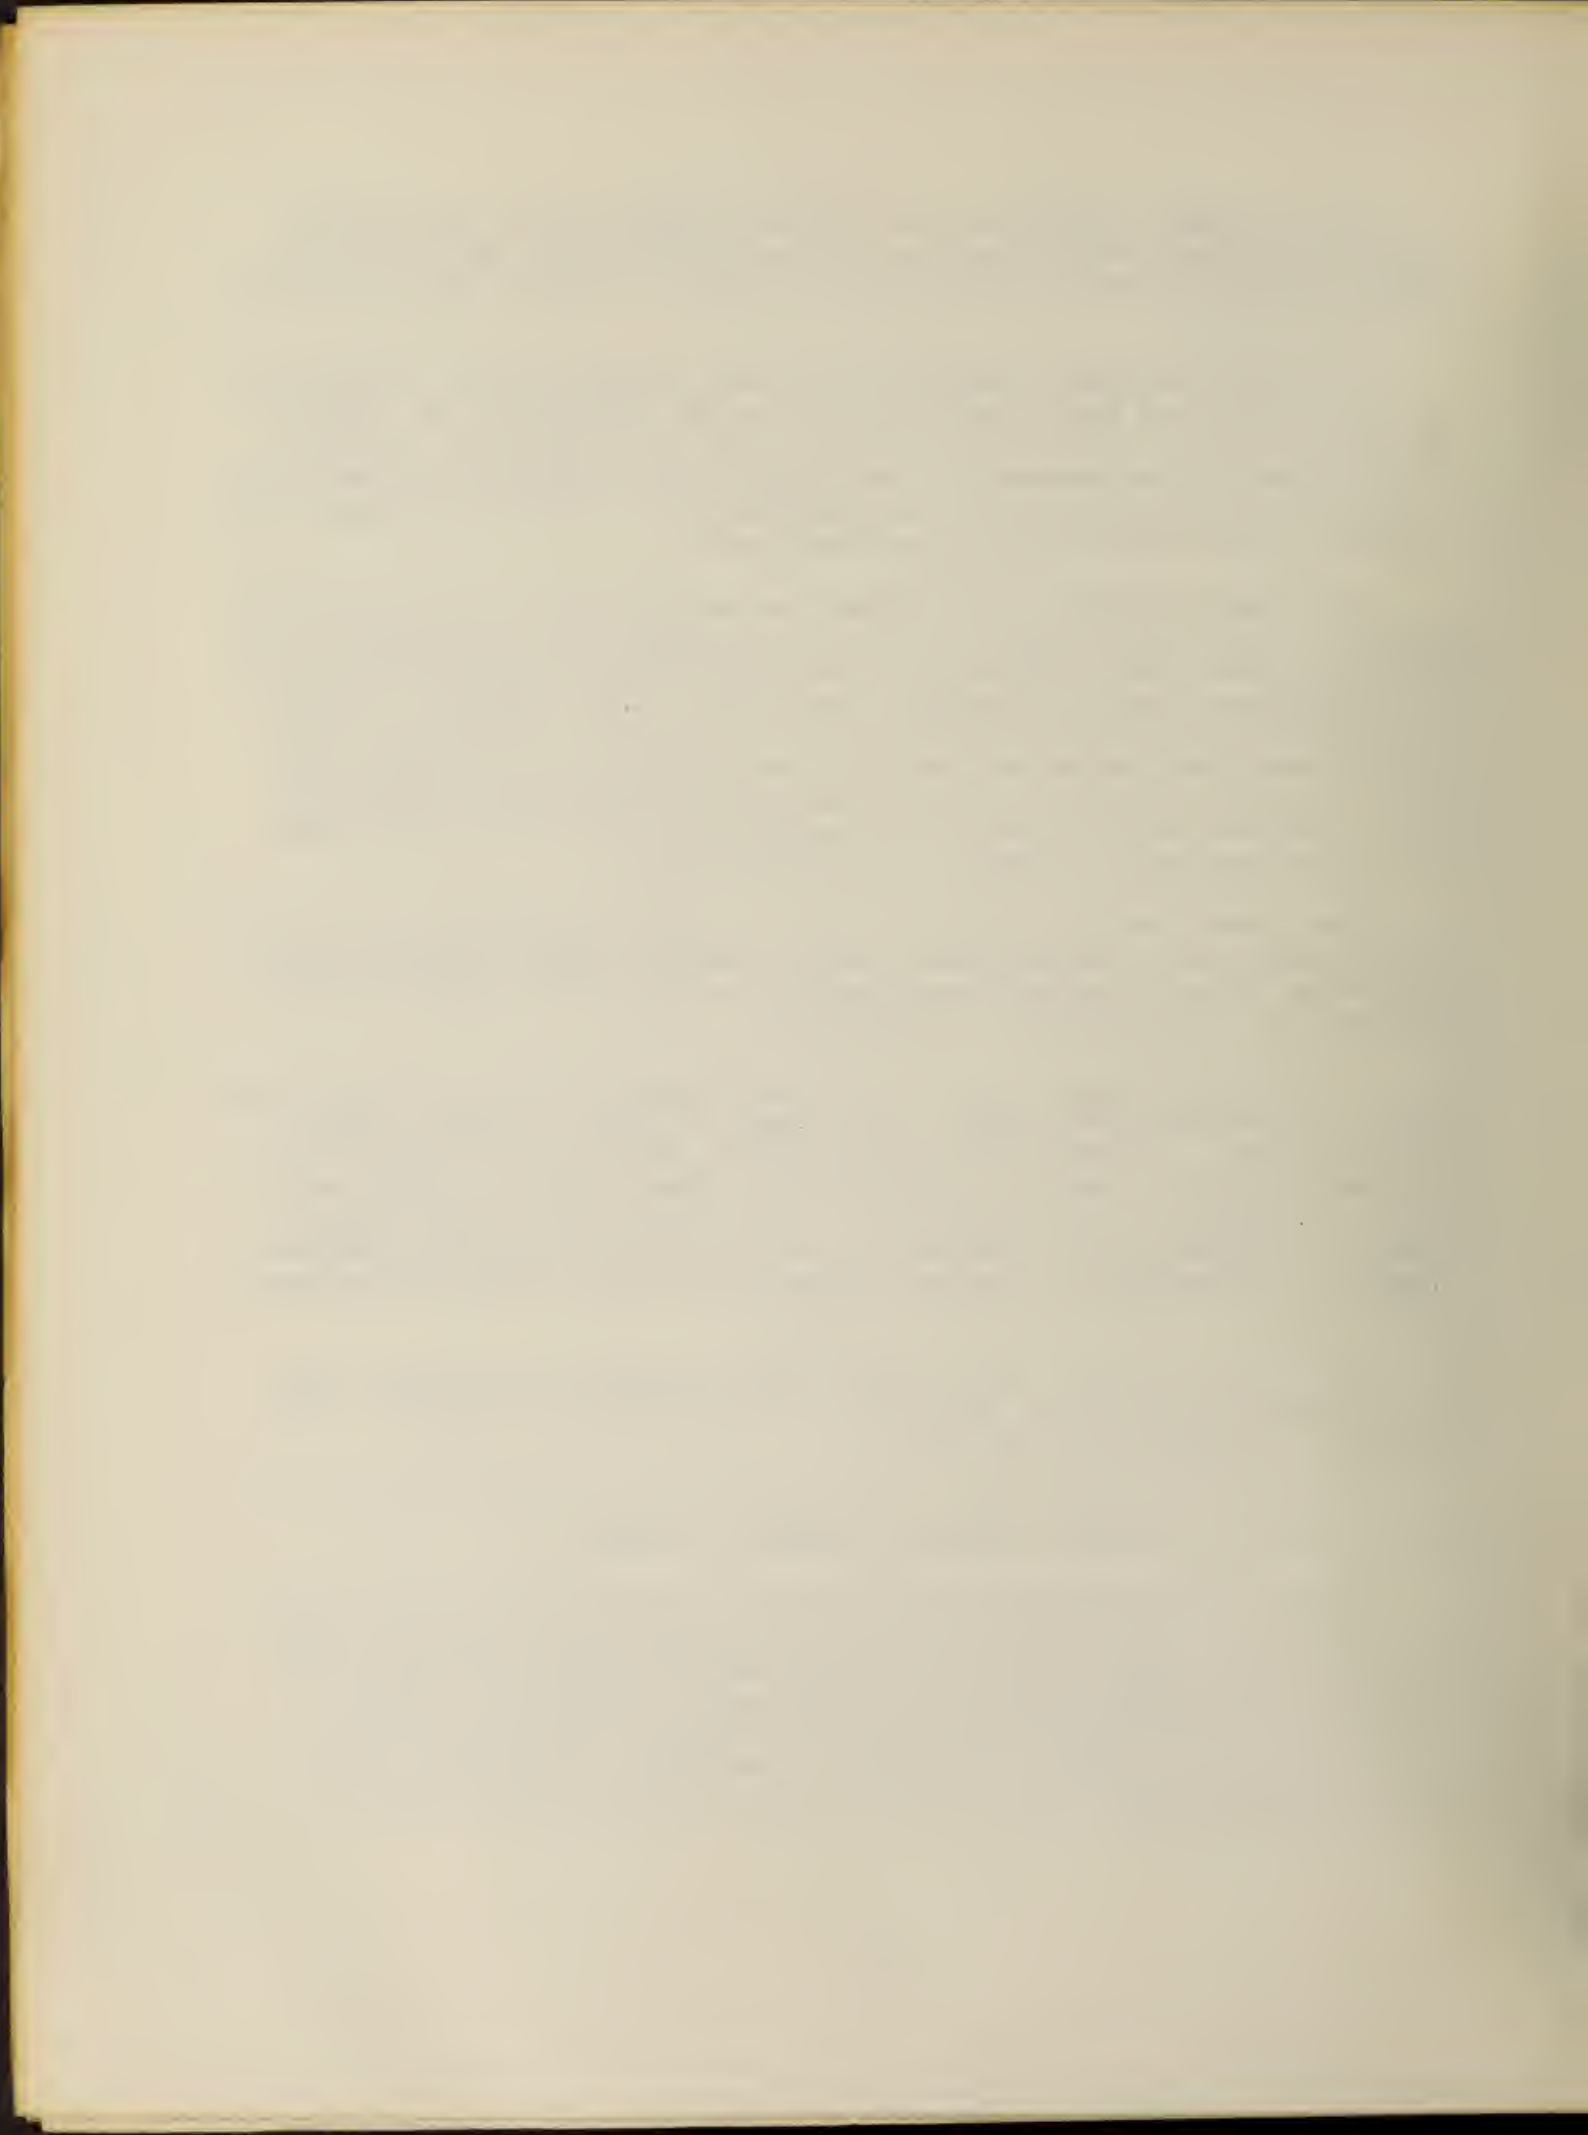

Years later when the teacher was long away from the school on the bench of the Cumberland, he would think of Sarah, hear her voice, and wonder what ever became of her. So from Sarah came another gift to the teacher: gentleness and love and respect for all children.

Allan Cameron Duggins' second teaching assignment was at Sulphur Springs School in beautiful Dutch valley. From there, he went to Hoskins School at Oliver Springs. This was a much coveted school and it took a little old fashioned politics to get it. The idealistic young teacher, looking to the top of the mountains, would not bend to this, but his uncle Jasper Smith, father substitute to Allan, and brother to his mother, Lydia Smith, was more practical. Consequently, a certain member of the school committee appeared in a new pair of shoes and Allan was furious.

"Well, son," said his uncle Jasper with a twinkle in his eyes, "that old man needed those shoes. Besides, there are judges and teachers. But they don't mix more'n oil and water."

Allan Cameron Duggins taught next at Frost Battom School, the home of his ancestors of the great families of Duncan and Frost.

It was at this time that he realized that something must be done about all the little one-room community schools in Anderson County and he determined to do it. That meant further schooling and the Superintendency. He attended Carson-Newman College and the University of Tennessee. He wept when lack of funds forced him to leave his studies at the University of Tennessee but the crusader in him rose to meet this challenge too. Every one of his ten living children had a college education and many went on for advanced degrees.

Allan Cameron Duggins became Anderson County, Tennessee's first County Superintendent of Schools. It was then that his fight to consolidate the schools into modern brick structures began. This was a long fight and his early lessons served him well. He was aided in this fight by one of the beautiful Henson girls, Clarice Isabella, a teacher herself and daughter of a sturdy race of pioneers. To tell of their struggles to overcome opposition to these schools would take another volume. Only one instance out of many, will be cited.

In one community, opposition was so bitter that even that crusading, red headed son or the fighting Scotch-Irish was discouraged. Then one night a tornado roared high over the valley, dipped only once, and swept that disreputable school building off the face of the earth.

Allan Cameron Duggins thanked God to whom the credit was certainly due.

This impressed those people whose belief in God was unwavering. The United States department of Education sent representatives to study the young superintendent's consolidation plans and progress and after that, support was unwavering and Anderson County, Tennessee's school program was known over the entire nation.

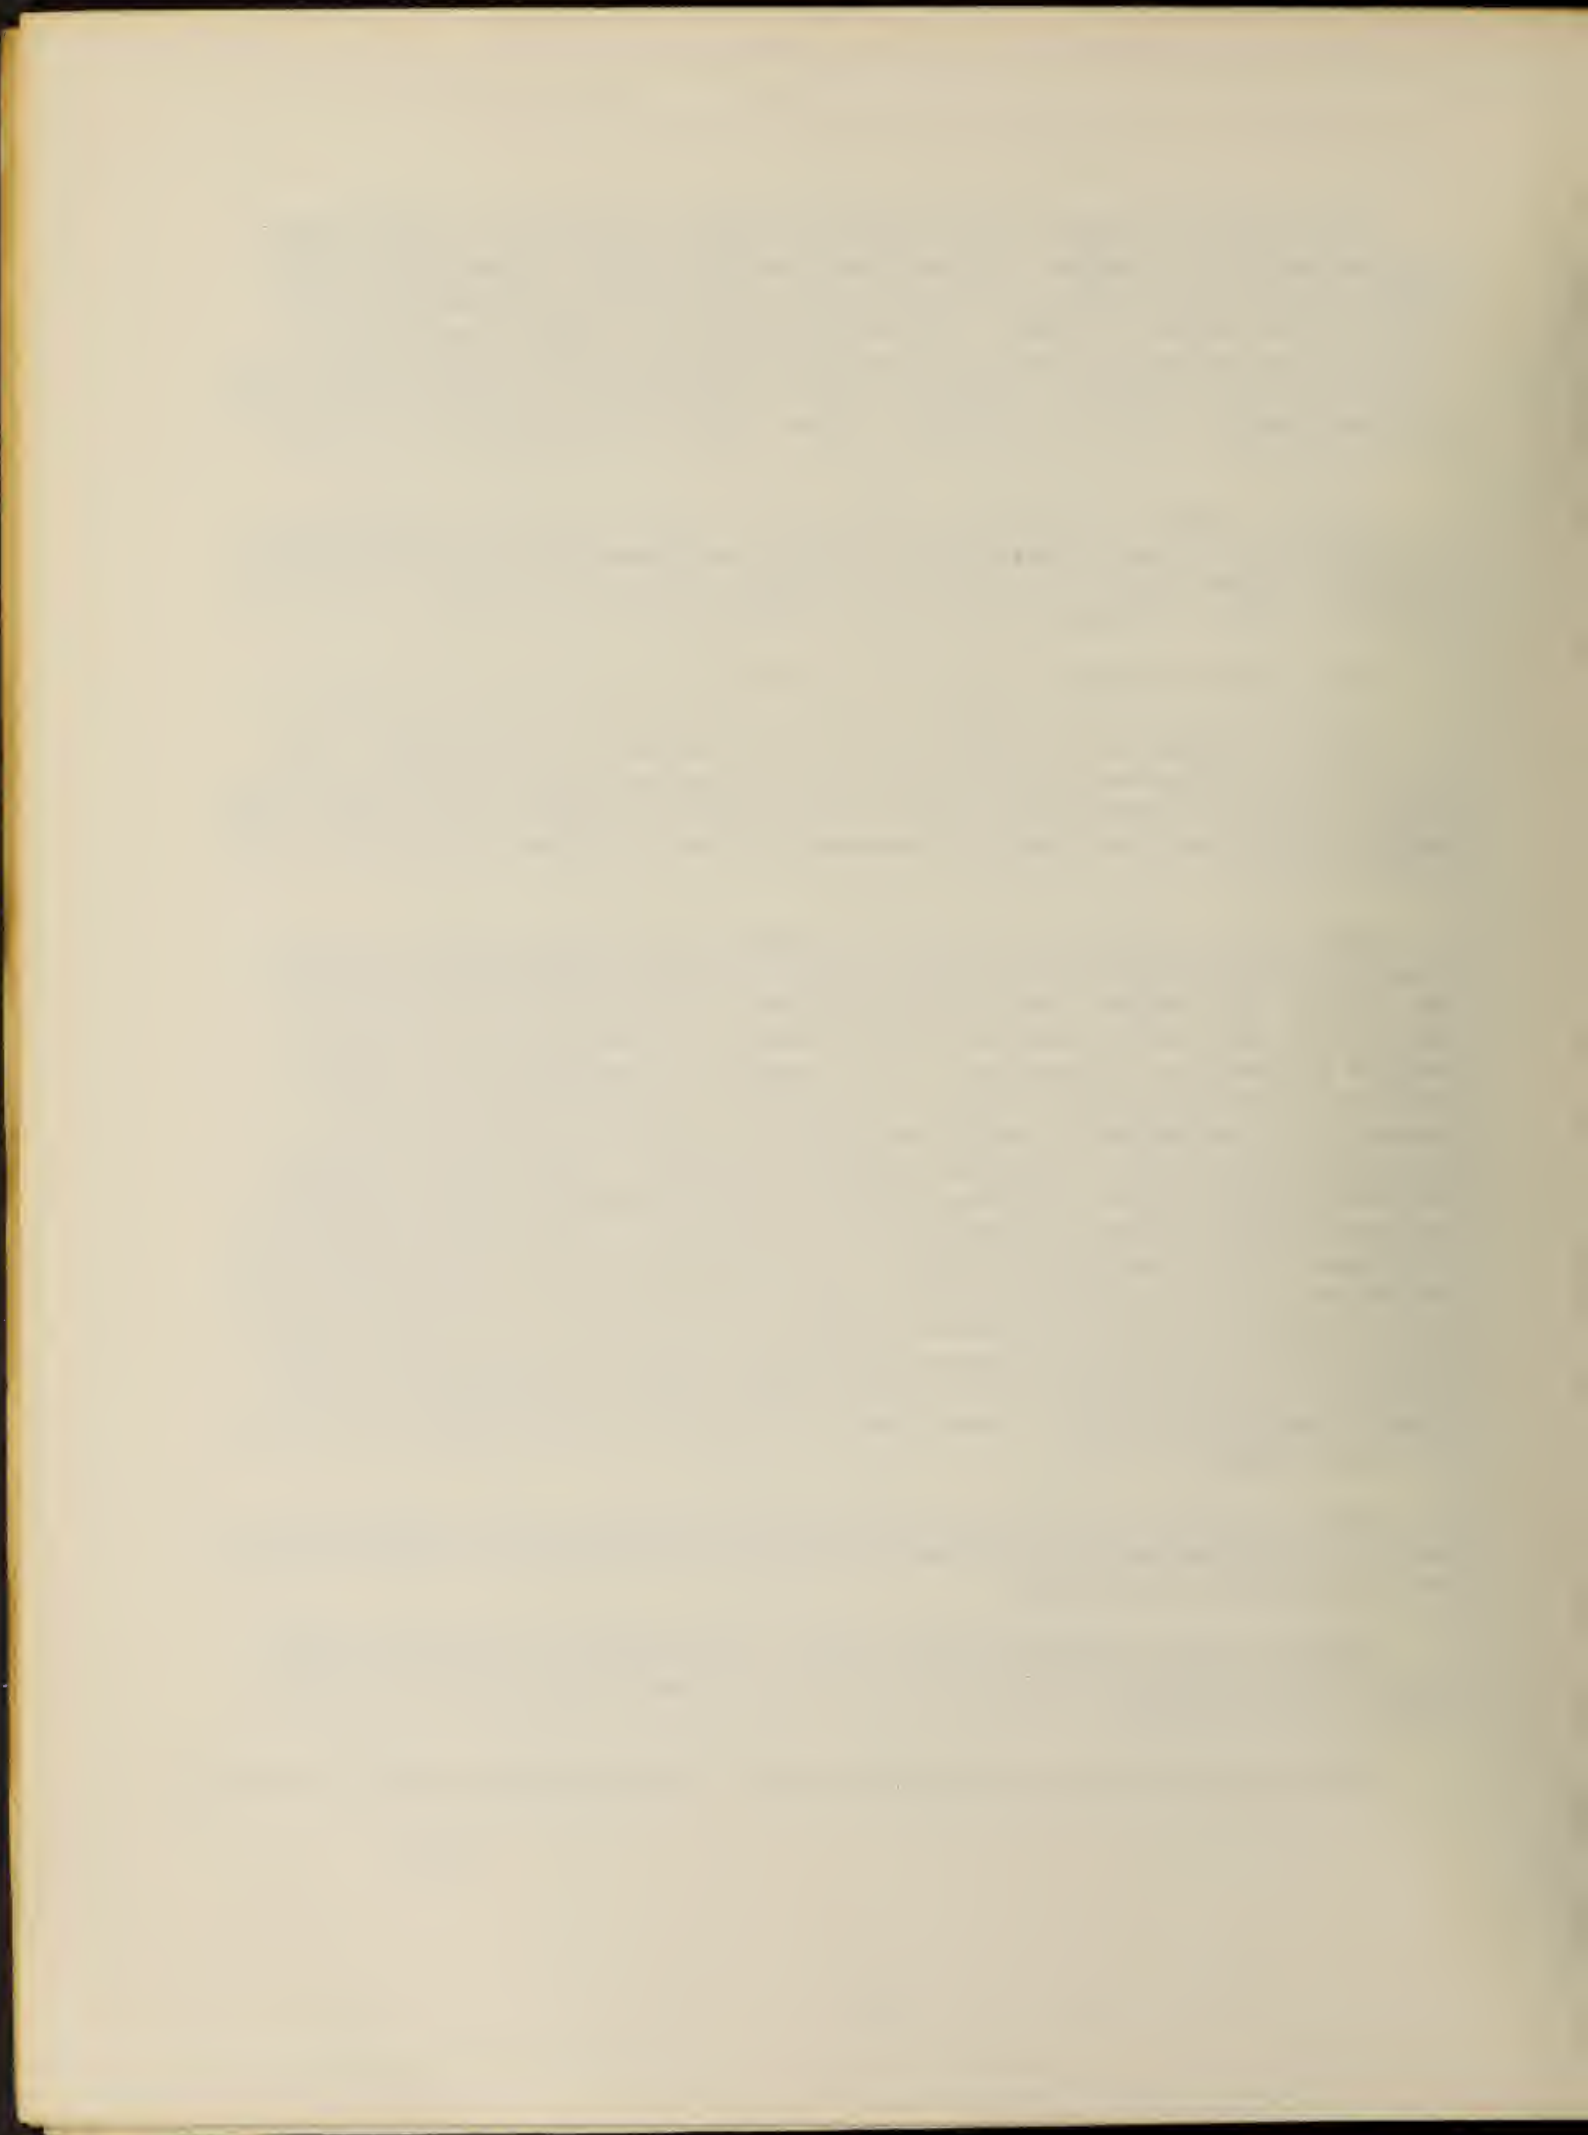

There are so many more things that could be told about Allan Cameron Duggins in the wonderful years that followed when he continued to crusade for a rich, full educational opportunity for the children of Tennessee and the nation. One could speak of the war years when, as principal of the schools in Carthage, Tennessee, he set a record, campaigning long hours to sell war bonds in America's fight. One could speak of his nine sons who served in the second world war. One could tell of his influence on the Greeneville City Schools where he served as principal, and of the time during national education week when he paraded five thousand school children dressed in white before top educators of the nation - one could speak of his retirement years when he yet worked to preserve the past for the children of the future - of his History of the Baptist Church, of his piloting the project to translate the old Lutheran Church book of Greene County from German to English, of his fight to secure and train a Safety Patrol for the City of Greeneville because some children were drowned, of his championship of the cause of securing adequate state funds so that old teachers might retire in grace and dignity.

Yes, one could tell of these things and many more. But, perhaps, his greatest contribution is the flame he lighted in the hearts of school children who came under his influence.

Perhaps little Sarah can say it best. On the day, he left his first school on the Cumberland Mountain for the last time, Sarah said, "me walks a little piece with ye."

That is how all his school children felt - as though they walked with him.

CLARICE ISABELLA HENSON

Clarice Isabella Henson Duggins was born in Clinton, Tennessee 18 August 1884, daughter of Levator Ware Henson and Adelia Elizabeth Brown. She died at her home "Mockingbird Hill", 24 December 1958. Burial took place in Oak Grove Cemetery, Greeneville, Tennessee. She married 1 September, 1909, Allan Cameron Duggins, son of Andrew Buchanon and Lydia (Smith) Duggins.

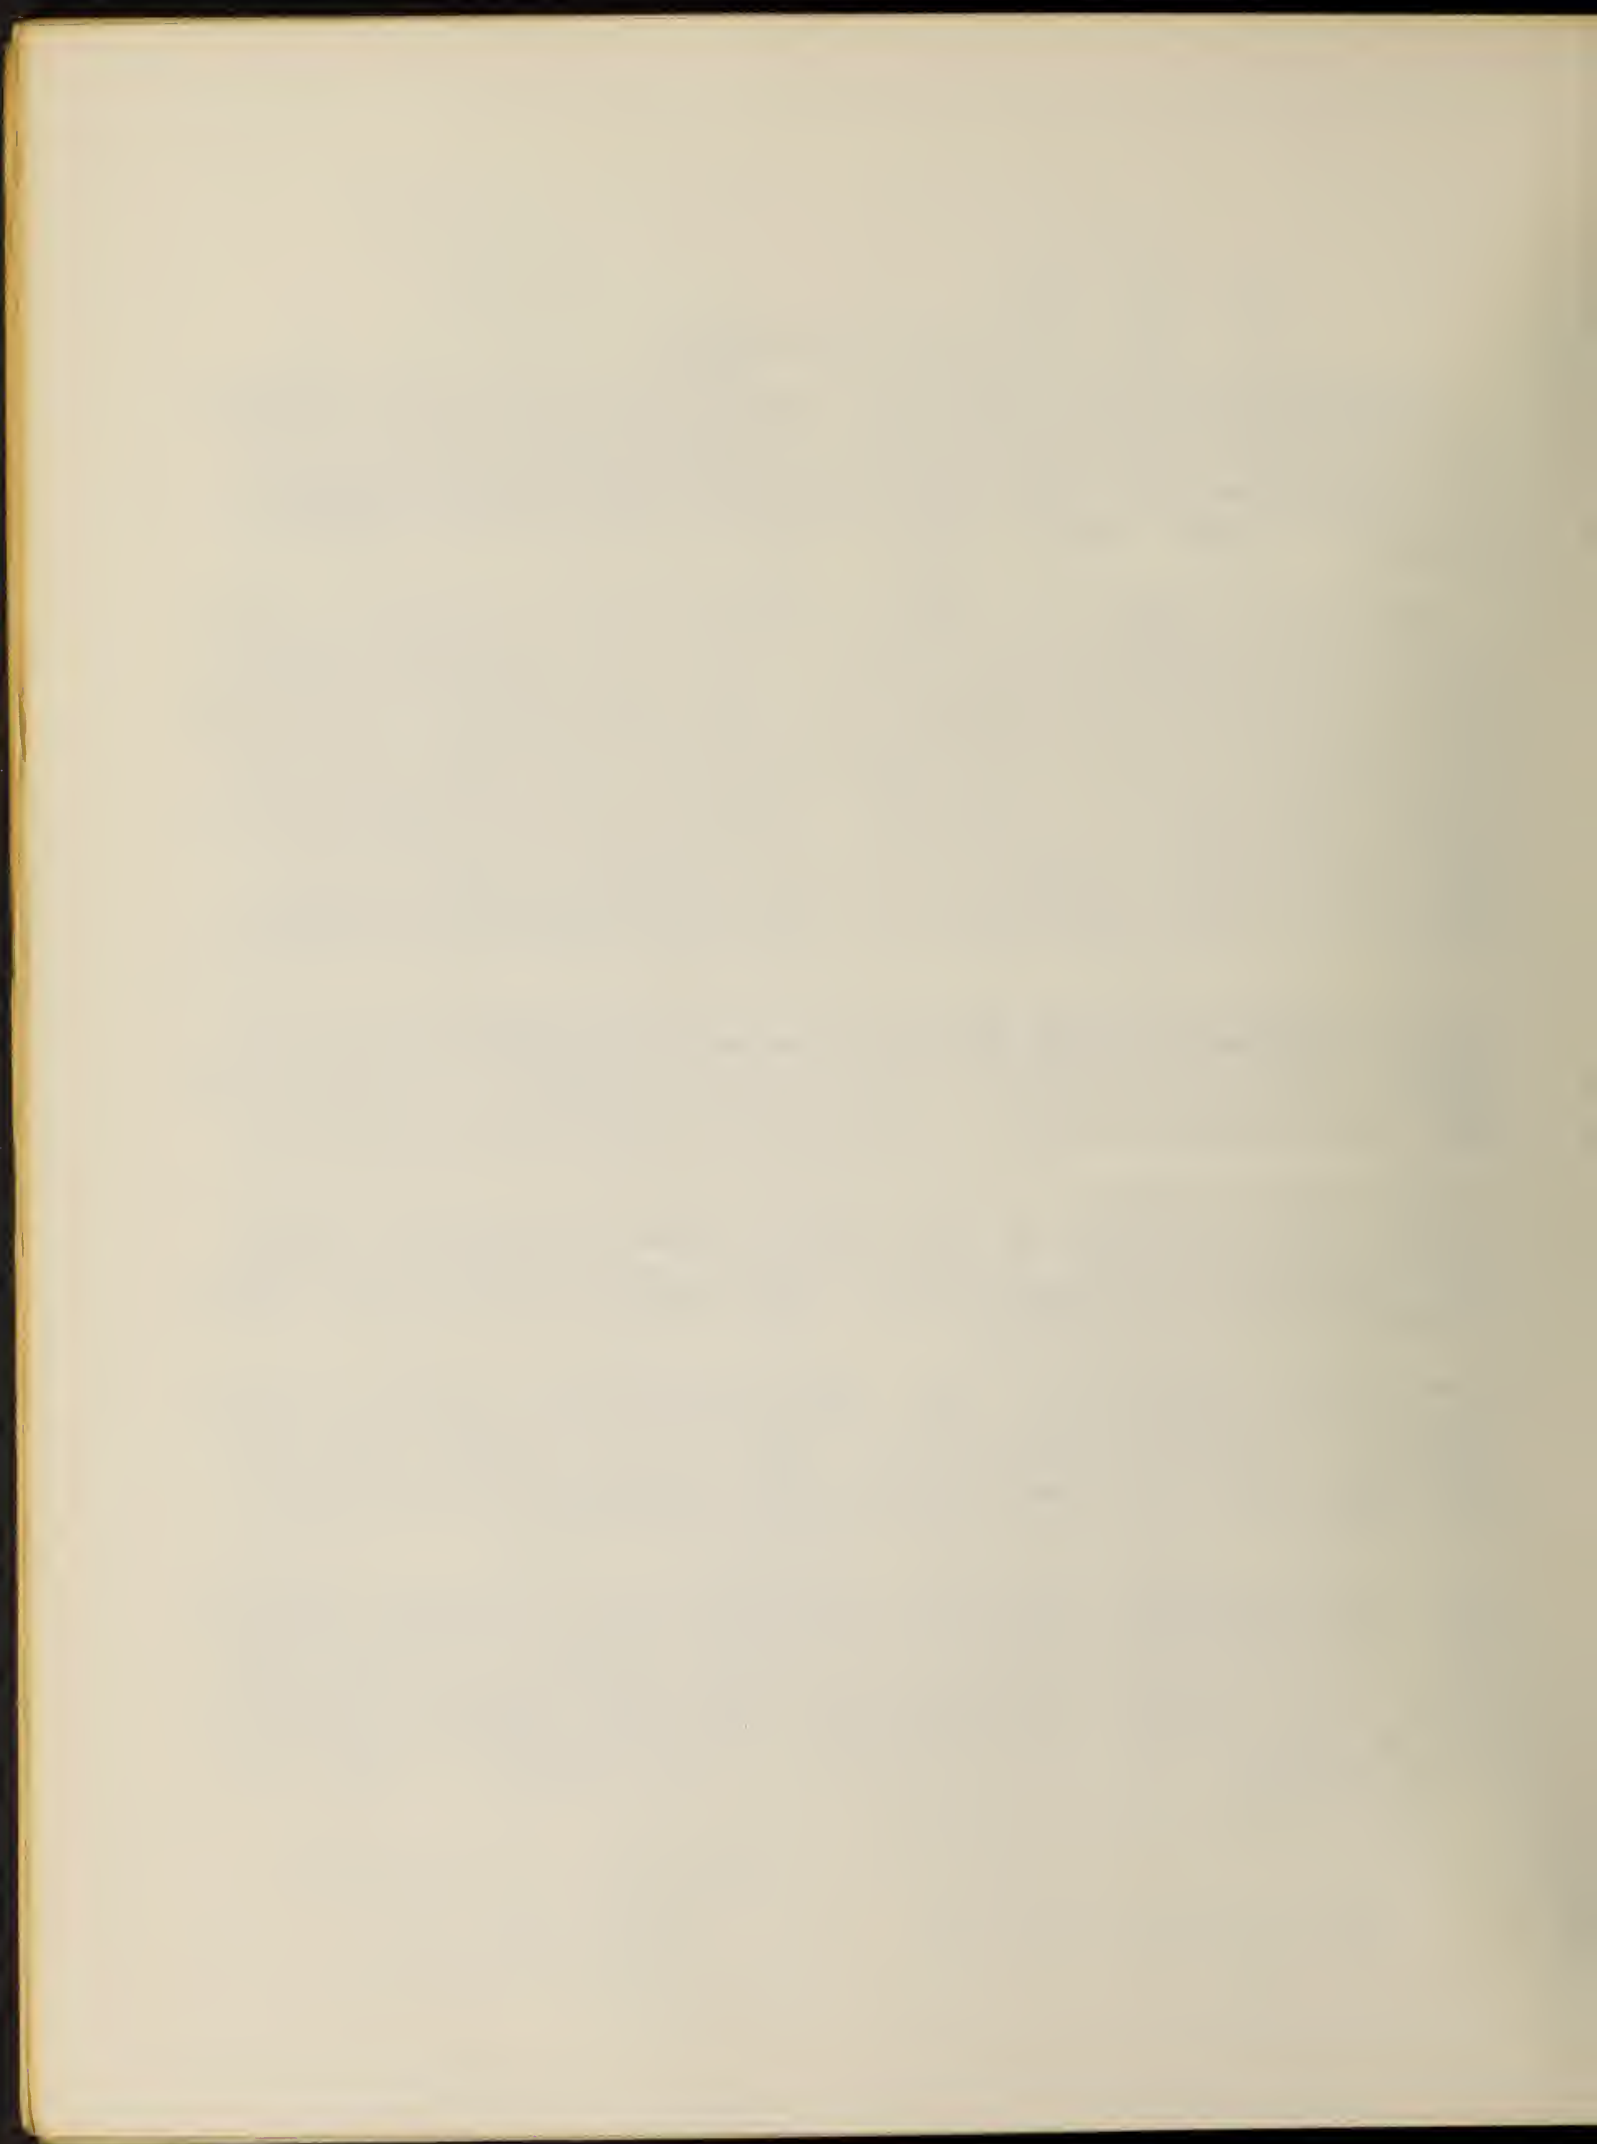

Clarice Henson Duggins was a wife and mother first but her family included the whole community in which she lived. Her love for children started at her childhood home, Blowing Springs. As the second child in a family of twelve, she mothered many brothers and sisters and her interest and concern for them remained unabated after she married and had a family of her own. After attending grade and high school in Anderson County, she attended the Academy and prepared to be a teacher. Her education also included weekly visits by the music master at her home, when making his rounds, and the whole family gathered around the piano to be trained in group singing. Her love for music, and especially for the native folk music, continued throughout her life and enriched the lives of her family and her community.

After teaching at Blowing Springs School for several years, she met the young County Superintendent of Schools for Anderson County, Allan Cameron Duggins. Theirs was a leisurely courtship and included all the appropriate rides through the countryside in Allan Cameron's spanking new horse and buggy, and homemade ice cream on the lawn of the home at Blowing Springs.

Clarice Henson Duggins' training to take an active part in marriage was clearly shown in her wedding. Her father belonged to the Baptist Church as did her husband to be. Her mother, however, was a member of the Methodist Church before marriage, and the young couple was married by Dr. Hamil, a minister of the Methodist Church.

The Duggins family moved to their home in Greeneville, Tennessee, in 1919. Clarice Henson Duggins loved birds and knew them all at sight. So she named their new home Mockingbird Hill. Here, twelve children spent their childhood. Here, also, came any child in the community who was hungry, had a problem, or needed a little extra good plain loving.

Clarice was a superb cook and her apple dumplings and cornbread were the talk of the countryside. But she had time to share her husband's interests also. She did not stand behind him. She stood squarely at his side, discussing school problems, attending school meetings with him. Many school boards found themselves the victims of a sound verbal spanking from her if she felt they were not attending properly to the interests of the children of the community.

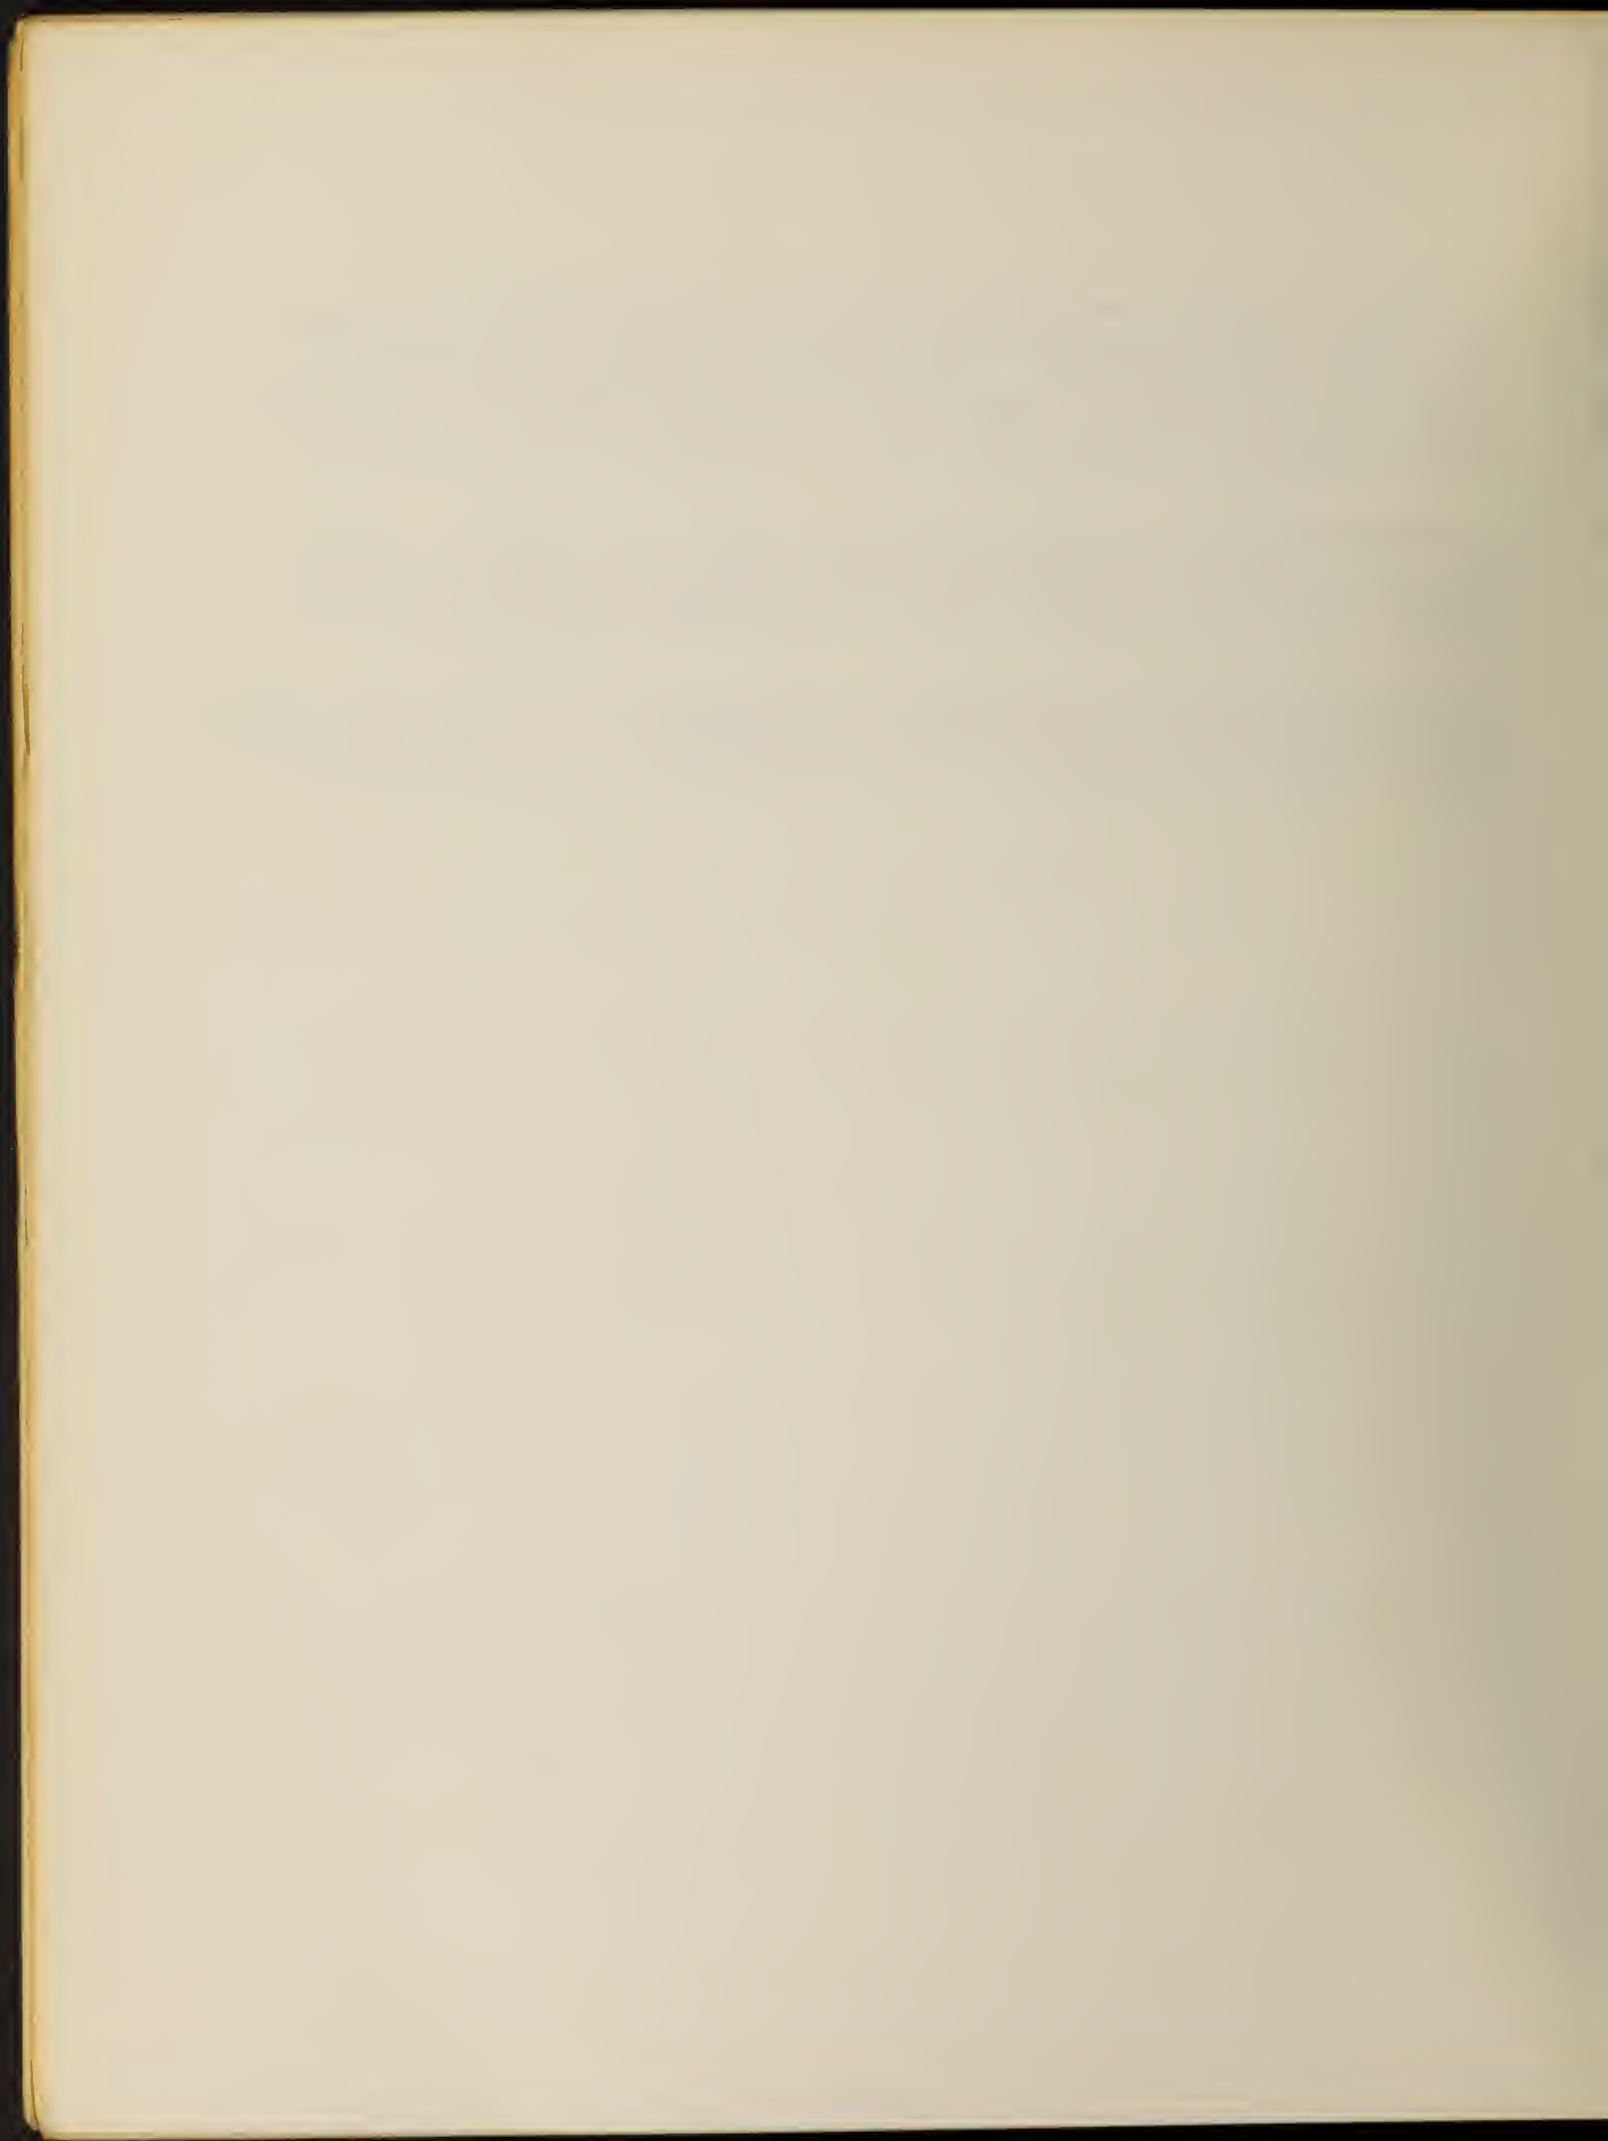

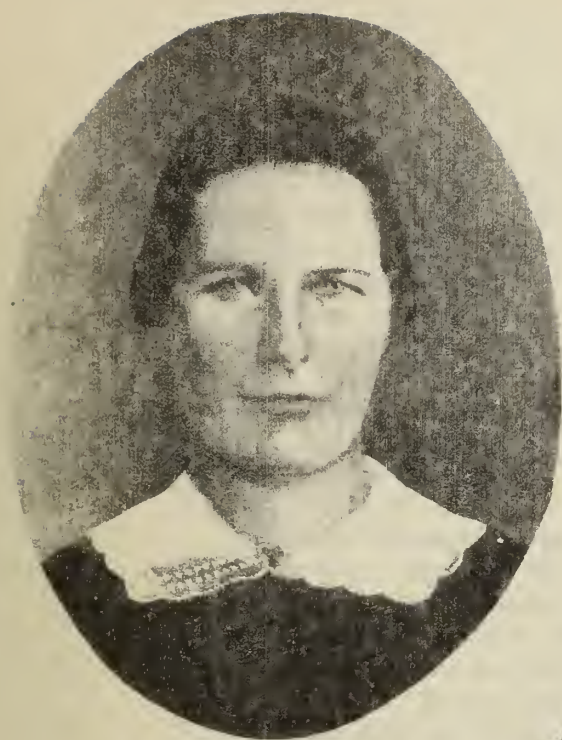

She was one with a green thumb inherited from generations of farmers. Her flowers and her vegetable garden were the envy of her neighbors. Everything she touched grew. She arose with the sun and went to bed after the last child was tucked in. And she sang while she did it. Her children grew up with the memory of all the beautiful harp songs from Ireland ringing in their ears.

Perhaps many fancy ladies would have sniffed at her hands. No milk white skin and graceful dangling fingers there. Her hands were big, square, brown, and freckled. They were beautiful and tender and could cuddle a bird with a broken wing or a child with a broken heart.

But Clarice Isabella Henson Duggins was every inch a lady, a great lady. On the Christmas Eve in 1958, when she lay dying, a tiny Negro boy knocked at her kitchen door. When his knock was answered, he asked shyly, but firmly, "How is the lady?"
